What is the 7th International Meeting on Indigenous Child Health?
The International Meeting on Indigenous Child Health is a biennial event that brings together practitioners, researchers, advocates, community members and others who care about the health of children and youth in First Nations, Inuit, Métis, American Indian, Alaska Native and other Indigenous communities around the world. By sharing scholarly and participatory research findings, and community-based wisdom, the conference is a unique forum for knowledge exchange.

At the end of the conference, participants will be able to:
• Apply new skills and insights about the determinants of Indigenous health to benefit children, youth and communities.
• Work with others toward achieving health equity for Indigenous children, youth and communities.
• Apply an enhanced understanding of culturally competent care and the role of traditional health and healing practices in Indigenous communities.
• Identify the links between the environment and the health of Indigenous children, youth and their communities.
• Engage new networks to share best practices and learn from community-based initiatives.

Who should attend?
• Pediatricians and family physicians
• Residents and medical students
• Nurse practitioners and physician assistants
• Nurses and other health care professionals
• Clinical researchers
• Tribal, state, and federal public health employees
• Child advocates
• Community leaders/Elders
• Other professionals and family representatives dedicated to working with Indigenous children and families
